

If you will be photographing or videotaping your participants, the participants must, in addition, sign a photo release form or a video consent form.

A standard consent form may include statements regarding video and audio recording that will be viewed and coded only by the investigators who were specified in the project proposal as approved by the IRB. Video Image release forms are necessary if and only if the goal of your research is to create a film, photographic stills, or video art in which participants' images will be publicly displayed. Such purposes include photographic and video installations or web pages viewed by individuals other than the project investigators (some types of documentary film may be exempt). The video image release form is separate from the consent form. The consent form must be presented first. A video image release form should be signed by the participant before video recording begins. It may also be advisable to present the same form again at the end of the recording period so that the participant may change his or her mind about the image release authorization.

I, the undersigned participant, hereby give _____ specific permission to publish, copyright, distribute and/or display images (motion and still) of my likeness.
